James Palmer is an architect with over 20 years of experience. A graduate of the University of New Mexico, he was an Associate at Ayers Saint Gross Architects before starting his own practice in 2002. He has a particular expertise in site design and in the planning and design of theaters and athletic facilities for educational clients. Jim's background in the Fine Arts and Printmaking gives him an understanding of the practical realities of the creative process, and a special concern for the total environment of place. The natural setting of the site, the movement of people and vehicles, the sequence of events as a building is experienced and the general ability of architecture to improve the quality of life inspire him most.
